“I chose the University of Iowa’s Palliative Care and Pain Management PGY2 residency program because of the faculty and the variety of clinical and academic experiences offered. For me, it was important this program foster well-rounded clinical education while having opportunities to work with phenomenal faculty and interdisciplinary teams in both inpatient and outpatient practice sites. The faculty are widely supportive, from scheduling flexibility as new practice interests arise to facilitating opportunities that align with my clinical and academic goals.

I felt like a valuable contributor, to both the program and patient care, as preceptors challenged me to become an independent clinical pharmacist. Additionally, Iowa City is a fun city, and I enjoyed the rich history of art and literature as the first United States ‘City of Literature’.”
Former Residents

“The program at Iowa, unlike other PGY2 residencies, provides multiple rotations in both palliative care and pain management across different practice settings with robust interprofessional teams. It’s a great learning environment for those not yet decided on a particular track or hoping to be a well-rounded clinician while exposing you to gold standards of practice like music therapy for anxiety, legacy work for end-of-life patients, and biofeedback therapy with a pain psychologist for chronic pain. Furthermore, the faculty focused on fostering critical problem solving - a useful skill when practicing in an area with limited evidence and complex patient cases - as well as the soft skills necessary to promote career longevity or to navigate the administrative and cultural challenges in establishing your own clinical pharmacy service.

The biggest factor that led me to be ‘bold’ with my rankings was the dedication of the faculty and the palliative care team in teaching self-care. It is an aspect of professional practice that is often overlooked and is now considered vital amidst a pandemic. For me, it was hard learning how to prevent burnout but this program made it easier with its compassionate faculty and partnership with the hospice and palliative medicine fellowship.”

"Going to the University of Iowa PGY2 in Palliative Care and Pain Management was one of the best decisions I've made. I felt this program was very robust in providing a wide array of opportunities in academic experiences, flexibility for progressive pharmacy practices, phenomenal mentorship, and unique experiences/clinical adventures (Pallium India). The beauty of this program is that it is very flexible to what your interests are and where you hope to grow.

One of the key things that drew me to this program was the fact that the pharmacy residency was embedded into the medical fellowship, and it had a comprehensive holistic team dynamic (music therapist, chaplain, social worker, etc). This allowed me to expand my knowledge outside of ‘just pharmacy knowledge’. In addition to the complex pharmacology, I wanted to understand the aspects of physical assessments, medical procedures, psychosocial issues, and spiritual concerns. This program really has the whole package.”

Life in Iowa City

“Iowa City is big college town mixed with suburbia and nice outskirts of nature. I loved the ability to be immersed with nature: seeing fireflies, going to Kent Park, doing free activities with the Johnson County Conservation, exploring Maquoketa caves, experiencing the full array of seasons. For the foodies, there are several hidden gems (restaurants and ethnic markets) to be found in Iowa City - feel free to ask me about them!”
